

New from the Center for Afterschool Education and Arcadia University

Teaching and Learning in Out-of-School Time (ED561S)
Summer Institute at Arcadia University

August 15-17 2008

Out-of-school time offers opportunities for learning that are distinctly different than the school day. Turning those opportunities into dynamic, effective programming requires a special set of skills, whether applied to afterschool, before school, or summer programming. See how to put theories of learning in action, spark youths' interest, and support academic and social skill building using non-formal methods.
